

Does the library have computer facilities that I can use?

Introduction to computing facilities at the Bodleian Law Library

The Library has 40 workstations for the use of readers. Each provides access to the Web, legal databases, Office applications and Endnote. One of the computers in the Graduate Reading Room also has SPSS. Remember it is not possible to save documents to the library's computers. Instead please save to

You will find computer facilities...

Freshfields computer room

Gallery computer room

Found downstairs on the lower floor, this is the largest computer room in the library; however during term time it is often used for teaching and may be unavailable.

Graduate
Reading Room

There are also computers in the graduate reading room which can be used by any graduate student. The graduate reading room is in the wing of the lower floor

The gallery computer room can be found on the gallery level of the library, at the end of a shelving row at the end of the international section. This room is never used for teaching and therefore always free for use by anyone.